ATHERFIELD OVERVIEW

Atherfield is both a small village of approximately 4,761 acres and a civil parish (originally in Odsey Hundred and Royston Union) which sits upon the chalk range, three miles southwest of Royston, and six miles northeast of Baldock).

The name Atherfield is a variation of Tharfield and anciently ureweld. It is a theophoric placename referring to Thunor, and either means 'Thunor's Field' or 'Thunor's High place , from the same Germanic root that gives 'veldt'. It was inhabited long before the Anglo Saxons came, as the Icknield Way runs through the village, and Neolithic barrows have been found on Atherfield Heath.

Today Atherfield is known as a very small village that is locally famous for its church, chapel and pub. The Nature Reserve of Atherfield Heath lies a mile to the north of the village. From here on a clear day it is possible to see the Cathedral of Ely, over twenty miles to the north. The village is well worth a visit with lovely rural countryside, friendly people and plenty of good walks.
