Hungercut Hall is steeped in history dating back to medieval times, and this one bedroom hall house is no exception. Situated at the end of a no through road this quaint hall house is bursting with period features throughout, such as the exposed brick and timber beams.

The property is accessed via a side gate which leads to the private garden, a wooden door opens to the small but impressive living space. With its imposing inglenook fireplace and multifuel burner taking centre stage the living room is amplified by its vaulted ceilings and exposed beams. The property offers a galley style kitchen with a range of under counter cupboards and drawers and space for a breakfast table and chairs. The private garden is predominantly laid to lawn with a small patio area. The garden is enclosed with mature hedging and a wooden side gate. There is a block of four sheds with power connected and are currently used as additional storage. The property also benefits from one off road parking space.

History of Hungercut Hall

Hungercut Hall has significant historical importance. There was a record in St. Mary's Church, Creeting Saint Mary, that a building by the name of Hungergutte Hall occupied the site dating back to the time of the Domesday Book. During medieval times the hall was used as the meeting house (or hundred court) for the Bosmere Hundred, where 12 representatives of local freeholders would meet to discuss administrative affairs for the area. It was also used for the collection of taxes.

Around 1665 at the time of the Great Plague, a gate was erected across the road outside the hall, where the residents of plague-affected Needham Market to the south could collect food and provisions, leaving payment in jars of vinegar and thus being able to source their necessary supplies whilst avoiding the spread of the plague north to the people of the nearby village of Coddtenham. There were similar sites to the west and east of Needham Market, known respectively as Chain Bridge and Chain House.

In more recent times the hall was used as a farm, part of the Ashburnam Estate, during which it was known as Hungry Gate Hall Farm, then the name was changed to Hungercut Hall Farm. Around 1919 it became independently owned, and the name was changed to what it is known by today, Hungercut Hall. It is thought that the hall was extensively rebuilt around 1735.
