DULWICH HERITAGE

'Dreamy Dulwich' 'History of the Dulwich Estate'

The Elizabethan actor, Edward Alleyn (1566 - 1626) bought the 1500-acre estate and bequeathed it to support and educate 12 disadvantaged students.

It still supports various prestigious schools, an almshouse and a chapel to this day.

In 1967 the Leasehold Reform Act was introduced to stimulate house sales; a Scheme of Management was formed to scrutinise and manage new development and safeguard the unique character of the historic neighbourhood for future generations.

LEAFY DULWICH

Dulwich's peaceful, picturesque, English neighbourhood village

From the 12th to the 16th century the Manor of Dulwich was densely wooded. It was part of the Great North Wood which extended from New Cross to Croydon.

Three fragments remain in Dulwich: Sydenham Hill Wood and Cox's Walk, Dulwich Wood, and Dulwich Upper Wood.

In 1905 The Dulwich Estate set aside 127 acres of land to be protected as an area of outstanding beauty. As well as 76 acres of Dulwich Park, it also has 40 acres of allotments, 69 acres of ancient wood and 12 playing fields.

GLASS

Glass is used extensively to create bright, light, and spacious interior spaces; maximising natural daylight to bring the outside in.

Additional glazed panels dramatically enhance the effect of the full-length bronzed picture windows of the formal drawing room, dazzling the room with extra sunlight.

This ingenious glass detailing has been echoed around the full-height front doors, in the corridors and the staircases.

SOUTH WESTERLY FACING KITCHEN, DINING, FAMILY ROOM WITH CRYSTAL DOORS OPENING OUT ONTO SECLUDED PRIVATE GARDENS

BRONZE

Exclusive bronze coloured contemporary detailing is featured throughout the design, a popular choice amongst the new architectural elite, an example being The Peninsular Hotel, London (opening 2023).

High quality architecture embodies an elegant combination of distinctive heritage with glamorous, individually designed, simple, functional and practical solutions.

REAL STONE

Alarm systems, panic buttons, front-door entry 'Ring' systems, Nest heating controls, control lighting to selected rooms and selected air conditioning, support the concept of high-tech luxury living.

SECURITY

Privacy and safety are fundamental to the modern family - and these homes are brimming with innovation - from electronic security gates to underground car parking, panic buttons in the principal bedrooms, video ring doorbells and state of the art alarm and sprinkler safety systems.
