Location

Redruth is located just off the A30 trunk road and is one of Cornwall's oldest and largest towns with significant history, particularly in mining. Being central within west Cornwall provides great benefit, the close proximity to the A30 gives easy access both further down west towards St Ives and Penzance and eastward to Truro, Bodmin and if needed out of the county too. In addition the mainline railway runs immediately through Redruth, the train station being less than a mile away. in addition the north and south coasts are within easy reach. Redruth has a number of primary schools, the nearest, Trewirgie is a just outside the town centre with the secondary school being a little further again. Both schools were rated 'good' in their last OFSTED report. In addition the nearby village of Lanner is also within immediate striking distance.

Lanner also has a primary school, several places of worship, three public houses, a local shop, fish and chip shop and petrol station. A few miles on from Falmouth takes you to Penryn and then onto Falmouth. The capital city of Cornwall.
