The Church opened in 1903 and is of masonry construction enclosed with solid brick walling of Ruabon Bricks with facings of Morley Stone with the interior woodwork being chiefly of Pitch Pine. The building originally accommodated 400 people on the ground floor and 375 in the gallery.

Internally the building is laid out almost in its original design although a non-structural glass partition as been erected towards the front creating a separate lobby area immediately off the main entrances and this links to the left hand side where there is an office area and a corridor linking with the kitchen and a rear office, and to the right hand side where there is a corridor providing access to a disabled WC, ladies and gents WC's, a former teaching room, vestry and rear corridor.

Either side of the front entrance is internal partitioning providing access to the two internal staircases to the first-floor gallery. Generally, the property has a carpet covered floor, part timber panelled walls with painted plastered above and painted plastered ceilings beneath the gallery. The central hall has a carpet covered floor and is open plan to the short span hammer beam roof truss to the pitched roof above.

The first floor provides tiered fixed seating with pews, half panelled walls, emulsion painted plastered walls and ceiling and suspended lighting. There are two further offices at first floor each with carpet covered floor, emulsion painted plastered walls and ceilings and timber single glazed windows.
