About The Property

Looking for a spacious six-bedroom home with sea and countryside views, flexible layout, and potential for a separate annexe? This deceptively roomy property on the edge of Cardigan Bay offers excellent multigenerational potential, off-road parking, and convenient access to the West Wales coast.

Positioned just off the main A487 coast road and offering easy access to both Cardigan and Aberporth, this deceptively spacious six-bedroom property offers flexibility, far-reaching views and multigenerational potential — all within easy reach of Cardigan Bay and the wider West Wales coastline.

With countryside to the front and distant sea views to the rear, the property enjoys a mix of coast and rural outlook. It sits on a tarmac and concrete in-out driveway, offering space for multiple vehicles and straightforward access from both directions.

The side entrance, accessed via sliding patio doors, leads into a porch and then through to the main hallway. From here, there's access to the kitchen/diner, lounge and a narrow connecting hall to the rear portion of the ground floor — ideal for creating a separate annexe if needed.

The kitchen/diner is a practical and well-sized space fitted with matching wall and base units, electric oven and hob, stainless steel 1.5 sink, extractor and an oil-fired Rayburn. The Rayburn provides both room heat and a traditional cooking option, and there are views out to the rear and side across the surrounding land. A door from the kitchen leads into a rear hall which doubles as a utility area with plumbing for a washing machine and external access to the rear. Just off this space is a shower room fitted with a cubicle, toilet and wash hand basin.

The lounge is a generously proportioned room, easily accommodating both a sofa suite and dining table. Three front-facing windows bring in natural light, and a slate and stone fireplace houses an old oil-fired Rayburn Rhapsody — now disconnected. From the lounge, a door leads into the hallway for the annexe area.

This internal hall connects back to the main hallway and also provides a second external access point to the rear. It leads to a ground floor double bedroom and a good-sized wet room with non-slip flooring, accessible shower, WC and hand basin. This part of the house is ideal for a dependent relative, guests, or as a fully separate annexe space with a few minor adjustments.

Upstairs, the first-floor landing includes an airing cupboard that houses the hot water tank. There are five further bedrooms — four doubles and a single — many with built-in wardrobes and all with open views. Windows to the rear offer a glimpse of the coastline around Aberporth, while those to the front and side look across the countryside and towards the Preseli Hills.

The family bathroom is functional but dated, currently fitted with a bath, sink and WC. It could be modernised to suit.

Externally:
Externally, the in-out driveway loops around the rear of the property, linking the main road to an adjacent farm track. There's a small patio, an oil tank and an old shed at the back — the shed is in need of some work or replacement. To the side of the house, steps lead up to a lawn area bordered by mature hedging and with distant sea views across the open fields. The garden isn't currently enclosed from the road but could easily be fenced off for added privacy if desired. In the front corner, near the driveway, is an old well, no longer serving the property and now capped with a concrete slab.

This is a property with clear potential — not only because of its scale, but also because of the layout and location. Set in a part of West Wales that combines coast and countryside, and just a short drive from the shops, schools and services of Cardigan, it's well placed for a variety of needs. Whether used as a spacious family home or adapted for dual living or additional income potential, the setting and flexibility here are hard to find.
