Alexandra Mill, a distinguished cotton spinning mill, was situated near the heart of Manchester. Constructed in 1869, this mill quickly became a notable landmark representing the city's rich industrial heritage. The architectural brilliance of Sydney Stott, known for his innovative mill designs, brought Alexandra Mill to life. It remained operational until the 1960s, after which it served various purposes before its eventual demolition in the 1990s. Despite its physical absence, the legacy of Alexandra Mill endures, symbolizing Manchester's vibrant industrial past.
