Heather is a village west of Ibstock in North West Leicestershire, England. In the Domesday Book of 1086, its name is recorded as Hadre, meaning "the heathland". There was an Iron Age settlement immediately north west of the village. As part of an open cast coal mining application, this was excavated in 1990. It identified a settlement from the late 2nd century BC through to early second century A.D

The village has a convenient store, public houses and a primary school. The village of Ibstock is just a short drive away and is walkable. The Market Town of Ashby-De-La-Zouch is close by. Countryside walks and National Forest attractions are all within easy reach.
