What the owner says

We believe that this HMO property has been a boarding house, or rented rooms for at least 100 years. The house has been owned and managed by my family for around 50 years. During this time many dozens of tenants have lived at the house, often for periods of several years. We have always attracted some tenants from abroad who come here to work for a few years to learn and improve their spoken english. The tenants tend to be working people, not students. The general ambience of Brighton and Hove particularly attracts younger people to the city. The central location of the house, close to work opportunities and excellent transport connections, both within and to outside the city, is a particular plus point.

My husband and I are now retired and wish to be relieved of the burden of managing the house. We are confident that the house will continue to prosper under new ownership
