SITUATION

Located just 100 metres from the water's edge on the charming pebbly beach at Porthallow, this property enjoys a prime coastal setting with picturesque views over the village and coastline.

The Lizard Peninsula is one of Cornwall's most unspoiled regions, with Porthallow being the official half-way point of the Cornish coastal path. As the southernmost point of mainland England, much of the peninsula is protected as an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty and is owned either by private estates or the National Trust.

Once a thriving hub of the pilchard fishing industry, Porthallow retains its maritime heritage with a handful of local fishermen still using the cove. Today, the beach is a popular spot, admired for its sweeping views across the mouth of the Helford River.

THE PROPERTY

A beautifully refurbished coastal retreat in the heart of one of Cornwall's most peaceful and unspoilt seaside villages.

The ground floor offers a delightful blend of traditional coastal features and comfortable, modern living. The well-equipped kitchen flows seamlessly into a spacious open-plan sitting and dining room, anchored by a characterful inglenook fireplace that adds warmth and charm to the space. A bright conservatory to the rear provides a lovely spot to relax year-round, and a ground floor bathroom offers practicality and convenience.

Upstairs, a central landing leads to three bedrooms—two comfortable doubles and a cosy single room, ideal for guests or a home office. The principal bedroom enjoys direct access to a generous sea-facing balcony, creating a striking space to enjoy morning coffee or enjoy near uninterrupted views over the coast on this exceptional south-facing suntrap.

A standout feature of the property is its traditional character, showcased throughout by historic panelled walls, exposed beams, and a stunning inglenook fireplace creating an idyllic coastal retreat.
