Description

Nicely situated along Castlegate, just a short stroll from the main market place in Kirkbymoorside lies this attractive, part brick/part stone town house thought to be of the Victorian period which, during the passage of time, has been extended at the rear to create a 'modern day' open plan kitchen/living/dining space with glazed doors opening out to the rear garden.

Rooms throughout the house are of good proportions and there is a wood burning stove in both the sitting room and living area. The property has gas central heating and kitchen and bathroom fittings are modern but that aside, the house does require some maintenance and would benefit from a general overhaul and redecoration.

With three bedrooms on the first floor plus a 2nd staircase leading to a fourth bedroom with en suite shower room, the house has all the makings of a comfortable family/retirement home.

Unusually for Castlegate, the property comes with an attached garage having internal access from the house as well as an up and over door at the front. Above the garage is a vast store room and with some thoughtful design and planning, this has potential to convert to additional living space if required. A neighbouring property has undergone a similar scheme.

The rear garden is walled on two sides and includes a paved patio and planting area. The garden would benefit from re-designing but there is scope to create a lovely, private outside area in what is a very peaceful part of the town.
