"I think it is the prettiest place I ever saw in my life, at home or abroad,"
Charles Dickens 1849

Built in 1839, this fine period house has many historic and literary connections including that with Charles Dickens who wrote five chapters of his novel 'David Copperfield' while residing there in 1849. Whilst at Winterbourne, Dickens entertained many of his literary friends including Tennyson, Thackeray, Carlyle and Mark Lemmon. A letter dated 16 June 1849 from Charles Dickens to his wife, Kate, reads: "I have taken the most delightful and beautiful house belonging to White at Bonchurch, cool, airy, private bathing, everything delicious – I think it is the prettiest place I ever saw in my life, at home or abroad." Designed with the principal rooms making the most of the exceptional southerly sea views, the house is not listed but retains many original features.

The house has been partially restored in recent years while other areas would benefit from restoration. The south facing grounds, extending to around 1.9 acres are a particular feature that include terraces, lawns, an orchard and a pond and waterfall to create an exceptional setting overlooking the sea. A path could be reopened onto the coastal path giving access to the beach below. Hadfield Cottage, available to the purchasers of Winterbourne House as a separate lot, is an adjacent period, stone-built cottage that has been a holiday let and can also provide ancillary accommodation.

BONCHURCH

Situated in the sought-after coastal village of Bonchurch to the very south of the Island, the area benefits from an excellent microclimate which made it especially popular in the Victorian era when many impressive Victorian villas were built. Combined with the natural beauty and sea views, this forms a really special environment. The Bonchurch Inn and St Boniface Old Church are a short walk away as is picturesque Monks Bay. There are superb coastal walks including to nearby Ventnor, where there is a variety of independent shops, bars and restaurants as well as the spectacular Ventnor Botanic Gardens.
