35 Great Southsea Street | £699,000 | Freehold

Great Southsea Street is part of Southsea, a conservation area with a rich history dating back centuries. While there isn't much specific historical documentation on Great Southsea Street itself, Southsea's development provides valuable context. Southsea was originally known as Croxton Town in the early 1800s, named after Thomas Croxton, who built houses for skilled workers in the expanding Royal Dockyard. The area grew rapidly, attracting middle-class families and eventually adopting the name Southsea after Southsea Castle, which was built by Henry VIII in 1544. By the 19th century, Southsea had expanded significantly, with new streets and residential areas emerging. Over time, Southsea became a popular seaside resort, with landmarks like Clarence Pier (1861) and South Parade Pier (1879). Great Southsea Street itself is adjacent to Castle Road, which has long been a bustling area with independent shops and historic buildings. The street has evolved alongside Southsea, reflecting the area's transformation from a small settlement into a thriving coastal community. No 35 sits right in the centre of the street and is easily recognised by its individual yellow brick façade, unique to the area, it has car parking facilities and the opportunity for an income from the well-presented one bedroom with en-suite 'The Bird Studio' a detached conversion of the former garage. The house has been sympathetically restored and has 1597 sq ft of accommodation with elegant living space for those looking to entertain.
