Bullers Green, Morpeth

Grade II listed eighteenth century coaching house steeped in history. Believed to be one of the oldest dwellings in Morpeth, Oliver Cromwell is said to have once spent a night on his way to combat in this unusual house. He stopped in what is now the cellar with his horse on his way to invade Scotland in 1650. The house was once a secret Roman Catholic Mass Preparation House when Catholics had nowhere to worship in Morpeth.

Cleverly and sympathetically modernised, blending the best of the 'old and the new' this splendid dwelling will leave a memorable impression.

Surprisingly light and airy, occupying an elevated position with fine distant aspect, the accommodation is spread over two floors but it is worth noting there is an integral staircase leading to a basement garage/cellar, which could be adapted for further living space.

The layout comprises:- hallway, two generously proportioned reception rooms, outstanding expensively fitted dining kitchen with range and built in appliances and Granite worktops, landing, three bedrooms with built in furniture to two and lavish refitted bathroom/W.C..

Externally small-town courtyard to the rear with the addition of a small garage and permit parking is available.

Guaranteed to impress the discerning purchaser with early Vacant Possession assured, viewing is imperative.
