LOCATION

Kensington Gardens and the adjoining Hyde Park are a very short walk away to the east, while Holland Park is within easy walking distance to the west.

Holland Street/Carmel Court is located in the heart of 'old' Kensington, to the south of Notting Hill Gate and the north of Kensington High Street with easy access to all the amenities offered by both.

HOLLAND STREET

Elevated contemporary living in a rare Kensington Georgian townhouse dating from 1724.

Carefully refurbished to ensure the preservation of the old, while seamlessly integrating all 21st century amenities, the unusually permitted opened out internal spaces allow for an exceptional flow on the two main reception floors and in all four bedroom suites.

At the top of the house are notably high ceilings, and at the lower ground level the reconfiguration has enabled a very flexible layout which can be used independently whilst also providing an important and very useful service floor for the house, including a large laundry, second kitchen, wine cellar, and ample storage.

Access to the level courtyard garden, through large bespoke corten framed glass doors, allows for effortless indoor/outdoor use.

The home epitomises the ideal of incorporating the best of 21st century amenities and preferred styles of living within the timeless and elegant surroundings of an 18th century structure.

CARMEL COURT

Carmel Court is a new building designed in the 21st century idiom to reflect the classical rear façade of the historic Holland Street building.

While being physically subordinate to the main building, its strikingly simple yet strong façade belies its size.

The scale and scope of its interior also surprises. The ground floor kitchen and living areas open onto the courtyard garden, through identical bespoke corten framed glass doors as those at the back of the 18th century house, thus extending the indoor/outdoor living even further between the two buildings.

From the ground floor a staircase between two columns leads down to a grand, voluminous library and cinema room skylit through specially cast pavement lights.

The top floor is the ultimate flexible private space – a 5th bedroom suite or office or studio – with a hidden shower room and considerable storage.

The style and design is again timeless, elegant and sophisticated, in this instance within a 21st century structure.
