FULHAM AREA GUIDE

Barons Court

Rather more affordable than Fulham itself, Barons Court (part of the W14 post code) has a lot going for it. The Piccadilly line can be reached at Barons Court station, which along with West Kensington station and the nearby A4, makes transport this area's strong suit.

A quiet idyll most of the year, Queens tennis club makes its presence felt in summer, when the famous 'Queens' tournament takes place in the run up to Wimbledon – drawing in top players from around the world. Local residents get free evening access to. Mahatma Ghandi lived here as a student, paying regular visits to the church on Challoner Street, now one of London's foremost Indian cultural centres, offering courses in yoga and meditation.

A great deal of the property here was built by Sir William Palliser, who named the roads after himself and his Irish family associations; Fairholme, Charleville and Comeragh. There is a coveted cafe, C'est ici which is a favourite spot for the locals or the commuters picking up a take out coffee on the way to the tube. You can walk into central Fulham and Parsons Green from here and it really does feel like a little enclave. The busy A4 to the North defines the area as does the North End Road to the East.
