THE LOCATION

Selected as the “best place to live in Scotland” in the Sunday Times in recent years, Stockbridge is one of the city’s best-served suburban locations. As well as all the usual shopping facilities, this vibrant area provides numerous cafes, bars, pubs, Michelin star restaurants, art galleries, delicatessens, craft shops and boutique retailers - all within a few hundred yards of the property. Other local amenities include a Post Office, GP surgery, library, public swimming pool and gym and banking services. All things considered, Stockbridge is a residential district of considerable aesthetic appeal, well served locally and within the easiest possible reach of all that can be provided by the city centre.

For history lovers, there are many notable local attractions including St Bernard's Well and Dean Village, in addition to the appealing architecture of nearby New Town. Stockbridge's picturesque qualities have led to it being used as a location in several films. Famous local residents have included the painter Sir Henry Raeburn, pioneering physician Sir James Young Simpson, physicist James Clerk Maxwell and Madame Doubtfire, whose name was borrowed for Anne Fine's famous novel. Inverleith Park and the Royal Botanic Gardens are close by and the Scottish Gallery of Modern Art is a short walk along the Water of Leith. For families, the property is within close proximity of several highly regarded schools such as Edinburgh Academy, Stewart's Melville College, Flora Stevenson and Stockbridge Primary Schools. Broughton High School enjoys a good reputation.
