A true country home of quality and distinction in a sublime and peaceful rural location on the edge of the Lake District National Park.

Castlehow is a historic home rich in heritage and well documented by its ancestors, anciently called 'Red-spears' and those who held this tenure served as peacekeepers and attended the forest court. The house has many reminders of its past and retains original features with stone mullions and ancient doorways. It sits within its own charming rocky outcrop with views of the lake district and an iron-age hillfort.

The spacious and characterful accommodation comprises; Dining Hall, Living Room, Kitchen, Scullery, Boot Room, Laundry Room, WC, 3 Double Bedrooms and 2 Bathrooms. Adjoining Castlehow is a large barn which offers a wide range of opportunities for further development as either accommodation, ancillary accommodation or for use as a studio/workshop.

Castlehow has been lovingly and empathetically restored over the last two years to recreate and update a fabulous historic home, combining the rich history and character of the original building with a wealth of updates, including an eco-friendly heating system and lime insulation, creating an enigmatic and comfortable home that would grace the pages of any magazine.
