"Unique property" and "Village location" are phrases too often used by estate agents. But if ever there was a home deserving of such a description then this is it. Walthamstow's Ancient House is reputedly London's oldest dwelling. It is older than William Shakespeare - in fact it was originally built in the reign of Henry VI, a time when the entire population of the City of London would have fitted into present day Walthamstow with room to spare. The house occupies a truly village location, looking out across York stone flags, through a rose bed to the 11th century church of St Mary's.

The property forms part of a Grade II* half-timbered building, and is located just round the corner from one of East London's most fashionable streets, Orford Road - home to a myriad of independent shops, eateries and bars. Walthamstow's excellent transport links are also close to hand, with both Central and Queens Road stations within a few minutes' walk.

On the ground floor you'll find the reception room, kitchen and bathroom. As with all the rooms, there are exposed timber joists throughout, reminding you of the age and provenance of this exceptional building. On the first floor there are two double bedrooms, one having an en suite WC. To the rear there is a delightful shared courtyard - the perfect spot to relax on a warm summer's evening.

Shall we take a look?
