

Marylebone Square

Intricately engineered architecture. Sensitive designed apartments.
A thoughtfully built home. Welcome to Marylebone Square.

What makes a building a home?
It's more than smart design,
a welcoming community and a rare location. It's a sensitive addition to a sophisticated neighbourhood.
It's a blend of simplicity and intricacy,
and of old and new. It's a place where you feel a sense of belonging.

A crafted building

Through its sympathetic construction, the building is a detail-rich yet contemporary addition to the area.

The New Heart of W1

Marylebone is a rare find. With more charm than Fitzrovia and more diversity than Mayfair, it has always boasted more character than its neighbours. Its proximity to Oxford Street and Regent's Park sits in contrast to its leafy surroundings and village-like intimacy. With an elegant mix of architectural styles – from Georgian terraces to Victorian mansion blocks – and an ever-evolving catalogue of stylish boutiques and eateries, Marylebone is both endearingly traditional and vibrantly urban. The latest addition to the neighbourhood is Marylebone Square. A contemporary take on the classic London mansion, it is an intuitively designed building that slots into the urban fabric of Marylebone. Home to 54 apartments, carefully selected boutiques, restaurants and a versatile hall, it offers the very best of a refined London village lifestyle.

Each street, manor and meandering lane in Marylebone has a story to tell. With its origins dating back to the 11th century, Marylebone has been shaped and moulded by a succession of noble hands to become the sophisticated urban village it is today. A desirable part of central London, it has been home to many famous names over the years, such as Charles Dickens, Jimi Hendrix and Paul McCartney. Marylebone Square is a rare opportunity to make a prestigious central London square a place you can call home.

The Story of Marylebone

A rich history
Marylebone's gridded streets and Georgian manors stand as testaments to the area's unique heritage.

1960

A place to gather

Initially established as an urban block, the space has always been a place to bring the community together.

The site that Marylebone Square occupies, which sits at the heart of the notable Howard de Walden estate, has been left as an open square since 1966. A prime spot for the area's lively weekly farmer's market - and otherwise used as a car park for the community - it is the ideal location for a new kind of central London mansion block. Weaving streets, people and businesses together into the urban fabric of the area, Marylebone Square is a building that speaks to the history of its surroundings and its vibrant future.

Today, the soft urban buzz of Marylebone High Street is complimented by a feeling of familiarity that runs through the neighbourhood. It's a hidden enclave that is a welcome surprise – an unspoiled pocket of London that boasts charming architecture, artisan cafés and tasteful boutiques. With highlights such as Regent's Park, the Royal Academy of Music and The Wallace Collection on your doorstep, Marylebone, in all its understated glory, is the very best of central London living.

A sensitive addition

Bound by Aybrook, Moxon, Cramer and St Vincent Streets, Marylebone Square takes up the space of an entire city block and gracefully slots into the local urban fabric.

Classic Craft, Modern Design

Rich with detail

The cast-aluminium balustrades give the building a distinct, authentic quality.

Combining traditional craft with 21st-century engineering, Marylebone Square blends into its historic home with a subtle modernity that enhances its surroundings. While the cast-aluminium balustrades reference the classic Victorian mansion block, the glazed-terracotta exterior speaks to a contemporary neighbourhood. “We wanted to use technology and engineering to reintroduce old craft into a contemporary production,” says lead architect Simon Bowden. “The balustrades were produced by a local foundry and reintroduce an architectural aspect that is hundreds of years old.” The building’s form is rich with detail: floor-to-ceiling windows accentuate the horizontal rhythm of the exterior, while Juliet balconies add a European sensibility to the design. “It was designed with a singular vision,” says Simon, “so it has a cohesive quality – and a distinct character that is strengthened by the robustness of the natural materials.” The building’s signature feature is an intricate lantern frieze that runs along the edge of the terraced penthouses, unifying the design with a unique identity. Marylebone Square doesn’t shout: it sits unobtrusively at the heart of the community with a graceful, eye-catching presence.

At one with nature

With an abundance of greenery, the courtyard is an oasis of calm in the city.

A place to pass through, gather or unwind, the open courtyard is the centrepiece of the building. Its expansive glass roof fills the area with daylight, while open sides bring in fresh air. In keeping with its naturalistic quality, the courtyard is filled with plants and a water feature, instilling a sense of feng shui and well-being as you walk in. Access to the apartments is by individual bridges and walkways, making it an open yet intimate entrance space. Whether it's a good morning greeting to a neighbour – or an off-the-cuff conversation on your way home – the courtyard provides a calming environment that is a rarity in the big city.

Your personal walkway
Most apartments have their own approach leading to the front door for added privacy.

Step Inside

For ambitious individuals, well-heeled couples or growing families, Marylebone Square is the perfect home for those looking for high-quality living in a comfortable environment. Refined, elegant and intuitively designed, each apartment and penthouse is generously spacious, yet warmly intimate. Floor-to-ceiling windows and glass sliding doors invite an influx of natural light – giving each space a bright and capacious feel. Whether you're hosting dinner parties for friends or birthday parties for little ones, the airy, open-plan layout makes it the ideal place for a get-together. Ranging from one-bed to three-bed layouts, spaces are tailored to occupants – making each apartment an inimitable home.

Generosity of space

The apartments offer plenty of natural light and an oasis of calm in the city.
