South-facing and six floors above Fitzrovia, 601 is a home whose first impression is light. Large windows frame rooftops at eye level, with the BT Tower rising beyond them. There is an unexpected sense of privacy here: London is in view, while the apartment feels quietly removed from the streets below.

Across approximately 1,076 sq ft, the rooms flow easily around an open-plan reception room and kitchen. The south-facing aspect makes this a particularly inviting place to spend time, whether working at the dining table or settling in for the afternoon.

A private balcony extends the living space outdoors, offering somewhere to pause above the rooftops.

Timber flooring, oak cabinetry and an integrated kitchen with Miele appliances bring warmth and continuity to the interior.

The layout offers something relatively rare at Fitzroy Place: an additional room that can serve as a separate study or third bedroom. It allows working life to have its own space, with flexibility for guests or changing needs. The principal bedroom has fitted wardrobes and an en-suite bathroom, complemented by a second bedroom and a separate shower room. Parking and additional basement storage add practical value, alongside the storage within the apartment.

Residents also have access to the Fitzroy Club, with its gym, private cinema, lounge and private dining facilities, while a 24-hour concierge provides everyday assistance.

Below, Pearson Square and the restored Fitzrovia Chapel give the development a distinctive setting. Charlotte Street's restaurants are close by, with Marylebone and Soho within easy reach. Tottenham Court Road provides Elizabeth line connections across London and to Heathrow.
