HISTORY OF FERNDALE HOUSE

A well connected and prosperous local business family, headed by Thomas Cowman, built this Edwardian House at some point between 1901 and 1910. Ferndale House, as it has always been known, was originally set within extensive grounds that once encompassed the area now forming Dwyers Close and extended down to the River Wreake. It was built over what remains of a 17th Century farm cottage, where you can still see some of the traditional iron stone walls in the snug/office and around the main front door.

The Cowman family business, based in Nottingham, was, amongst other interests, responsible for extracting the gravel from what is now known as 'Frisby Lakes'. Thomas Cowman became friends with the famous T.E. Lawrence, better known as 'Lawrence of Arabia', who was a British archaeologist, soldier, writer and diplomat, and a friend of Winston Churchill, Thomas Hardy and George Bernard Shaw. Lawrence helped shape Middle Eastern politics after WW1. Lawrence of Arabia has stayed overnight at Ferndale House, when visiting Nottingham and shared meals with the Cowman family around the original kitchen table seen in the sales photos.

Thomas Cowman and T.E. Lawrence built their friendship through a shared love of motorcycles and fast cars. T.E. Lawrence travelled to Nottingham regularly to visit the Brough Motorcycle Company. Over his lifetime, he owned seven 'Brough Superior Motorcycles', all custom built for him by George Brough. They were extremely expensive in their day, often referred to as the 'Rolls Royce of Motorcycles'. One of Thomas Cowman's grandsons, Roger, continued the family passion for speed and raced motor cars successfully as an adult. Thomas's son, Kenneth Houghton Cowman and his wife Nora, continued to live in the property and run their successful family business. Generations of the Cowman family have remained living in Ferndale House until it was sold to the present owners in late 2015.
