Reverdy Road, SE1

The house is a particularly fine example of early Victorian architecture, set on a street renowned for its strong sense of community and enduring character. The street's history and distinctive identity have even been celebrated in the BBC documentary series The Secret History of Our Streets, reflecting its special place within London's architectural and social history.

The ground floor opens into an attractive entrance hall, leading to an elegant double reception room at the front of the house, where original floorboards and an exposed brick chimney breast provide a wealth of period character. To the rear, there is a contemporary kitchen-dining room, offering an excellent space for everyday family life and entertaining, with doors opening directly onto the private garden. A separate guest cloakroom completes this level.

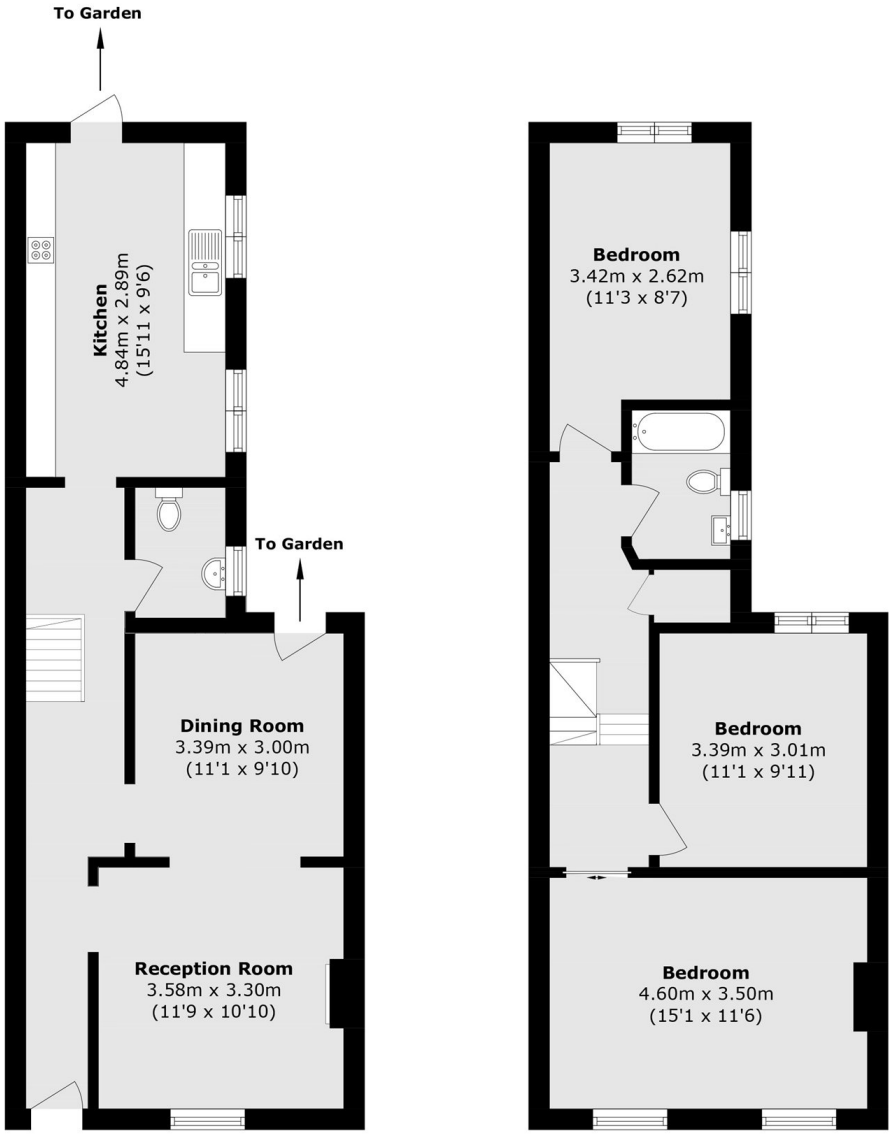

The first floor provides three generously proportioned double bedrooms, each offering excellent space and flexibility for family living, guest accommodation or a home working environment. These are served by a well-appointed three-piece family bathroom, with additional loft storage above.

A number of neighbouring properties have been extended over the years, establishing a precedent for further enhancement, subject to the necessary consents. Particularly noteworthy is that houses towards this end of the street benefit from substantially larger gardens, with some owners having created additional accommodation in the form of external home offices.
