The Property

The refurbished building known as “Bank” at 26-28 on Warwick's High Street is one of the town's most iconic properties currently available for office, retail or leisure use. It was purpose built in 1924 for the National Provincial, in the golden age of banking architecture with a neo-Georgian theme, in the style of Sir Christopher Wren. The buildings symmetrical exterior incorporates elegant white stone work which contrasts the red brick, offering a prominent entrance with large feature windows that lead up towards ornamental stonework on the parapet roof. There is a self-contained ATM room with external only access let separately to RBS.

The interior of the building exudes period features including chequered slate and marble tiles, wood panelling and parquet flooring. Plaster cornice and coving in the old banking hall and managers office highlight the nineteen feet high ceiling. A sympathetic extension has internal balconies overlooking the ground floor area with a further glass and steel mezzanine floor adding space, whilst retaining the open feel. Huge windows to three sides of the building flood the space with natural daylight, whilst stairs lead to the former banks vault with original door housing Decimal (10) and Stirling (18) person meeting rooms and drinks station.

The Town

The county town of Warwick sits upon the River Avon and has been inhabited since the 6th century. Warwick school lays claim to the oldest boys' school in the country, founded circa 914. In medieval times town walls were erected, of which the East and Westgate can still be seen. Warwick Castle, built in 1068, by William the Conqueror, has evolved from fortress to country house, to one of the UK's leading tourist attractions. The Castle forms a perfect backdrop for outdoor concerts and events and boasts in excess of half a million visitors per annum, with accommodation and glamping options providing 20,000 overnight stays a year, offering significant extended tourist spend, in addition to the town's growing affluent population of over 33,000. Warwick and nearby Stratford upon Avon make Warwickshire one of the countries most visited tourist locations outside the capital, with annual visitor figures into the millions. The tourist information centre is approximately 150 metres from the property.

The castle was strategically sited because of the transportation links offered by the River Avon and Fosse Way. Nowadays the Midland Motorway network, Birmingham Airport and Warwick and Warwick Parkway railway stations offer the modern-day equivalent of convenient links across the country. Warwick's central location has attracted many high-profile companies such as IBM, The National Grid and Volvo UK with the county home to big name employers such as Aston Martin, Eon, JLR, Rolls Royce and TNT. Warwick boasts a mixture of fine architecture from the Tudor period and the 17th century. The town's historic buildings have featured in many period dramas, such as Pride and Prejudice and the TV detective series Shakespeare and Hathaway is also filmed in the town. Warwick Racecourse has a number of televised meetings throughout the year. There is a thriving Saturday market and Market hall museum which dates back to 1836. Swan Street is the town's main shopping street with National and Independent traders.
