SITUATION

The Meeting Place is situated in the heart of the historic mining town of St Just on the Penwith Peninsula.

St Just offers a comprehensive range of everyday facilities and amenities which are supplemented further by Penzance about eight miles to the east.

Located within an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty, the Penwith Peninsula remains remarkably unspoilt, showcasing a breathtaking landscape of rugged cliffs, wooded valleys, quaint fishing coves, and beautiful sandy beaches. Nearby Sennen Cove offers excellent surfing, charming local shops, pubs, and restaurants, all set against spectacular coastal scenery. This part of West Cornwall is also celebrated for its rich cultural heritage, home to attractions such as the cliff-top Minack Theatre at Porthcurno, numerous local galleries in Penzance, and the world-famous Tate Gallery in St Ives. The village of St Buryan, approximately 2.5 miles away, provides a selection of local amenities, while the harbour town of Penzance serves as the main commercial hub of the Land's End Peninsula, with mainline rail connections to London Paddington.

THE HISTORY

Steeped in centuries of Cornish heritage, The Meeting Place is an exceptional residence whose historical importance is matched only by its remarkable character and charm. Dating back to the early 1700s, this unique home is widely recognised as Cornwall's oldest Methodist meeting house and holds a fascinating connection to the origins of Methodism itself. Historical records show that John Wesley, the founder of the Methodist movement, preached here on numerous occasions, even referencing the property in his journals as far back as 1743.
