MAJESTIC PERIOD FEATURES

Built circa 1699 during the reign of William and Mary, “The Rosary” (along with its back-to-back neighbour “The Hollies”) is thought to predate every other private home in town; only the remnants of Henry VII’s royal palace are older.

Commissioned by merchant Nathaniel Rawlins as a gift for his daughter, this Grade II listed gem has been a family home for over three centuries. Behind the elegant five-window facade and striking oriel bay window lie beautifully proportioned rooms, a pine-panelled library, and a remarkable rib-vaulted kitchen — all just moments away from the River Thames and the heart of Richmond.

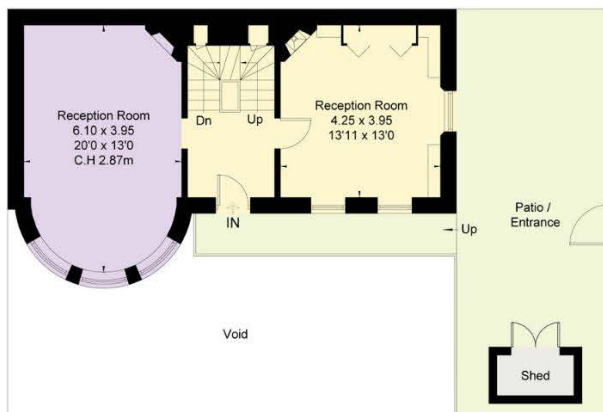

Over three hundred years of history - One extraordinary home.

Upon arrival, The Rosary immediately impresses with its handsome entrance and private patio garden. Arranged over four principal floors and extending to approximately 2,336 sq. ft. (217 square metres), the house offers spacious and elegant accommodation, enhanced by an abundance of period features typical of a property of this age and character. The elegant staircases and large box sash windows found in many of the rooms certainly add to the home’s charm and grandeur.

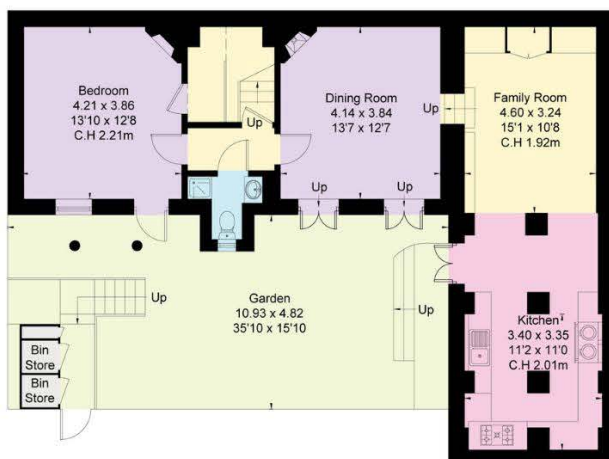

Local transport links include numerous bus routes to surrounding areas, plus fast and frequent trains to Central London via both South West Trains (Waterloo 19 minutes) and London Underground’s District Line (West End 38 minutes).
