Situation

Sheridan House enjoys an enviable position on Highbury Drive, just a few minutes' walk from Leatherhead train station and is one of the closest residential addresses to the station in the whole town. From here, commuters benefit from fast and frequent services, with around six trains an hour into central London, journeys to London Waterloo taking approximately 45 minutes and London Victoria around 54 minutes. Guildford is also easily reached in about 26 minutes, making this an ideal base for commuters in multiple directions.

Leatherhead town centre is roughly half a mile away, an easy stroll along attractive residential streets. The town's pedestrianised high street offers a good mix of well-known retailers and independent shops, cafés and restaurants, along with a traditional street market held on Thursdays and Saturdays. The Leatherhead Theatre provides a cultural hub for the town, combining a cinema and arts centre under one roof, while the historic town itself dates back over a thousand years, having grown up beside a ford on the River Mole.

For those who enjoy the outdoors, Leatherhead sits at the edge of the beautiful Surrey Hills, offering superb walking, cycling and countryside access just a short distance from the doorstep, while remaining conveniently close to the M25 for wider road connections.
