The land on the Western boundary is accessible towards the Northern boundary and lies about 280 metres above sea level before falling steeply Southwards with an area of unimproved and non-accessible land. There is a useful sheepwalk towards the Eastern boundary which rises to 430 metres above sea level.

The land around Rhoswydol on the lower Eastern boundary is productive silage making land and very accessible.

The land appears to have been well managed with the majority of the fences maintained, with natural water sources and with most of the land accessible by 4x4 vehicles and tractors.
