The property provides seven reception rooms, including a characterful living room with an inglenook fireplace and multi-fuel burner, a large tea room with independent, wheelchair friendly external access and WC facilities, and a second-floor living room with open countryside views. Three bedrooms benefit from en-suite facilities, and the kitchen offers a substantial central island along with integrated appliances. Alston is a historic market town set within the North Pennines Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty, widely recognised as one of the highest market towns in England. The town offers independent shops, cafés, pubs and essential services, with a well-established visitor economy well suited to the property's current hospitality use. The Pennine Way, Pennine Cycleway and South Tynedale Railway are all nearby, and the A686 connects to Penrith and the M6 to the west and Hexham and the A69 to the east. Carlisle, approximately 25 miles away, offers mainline rail services to London Euston and Glasgow. This is a rare opportunity for buyers seeking a versatile property with genuine commercial potential in a truly distinctive setting.
