The front left half of the now “semi detached” exceptional five-bedroom former manor house, offers an opportunity to acquire a piece of local history, built for the Grayrigge family ancestors in 1710 (Henry Fletcher). Set within the tranquil semi-rural hamlet of Field Broughton and bordering the picturesque, medieval village of Cartmel, the property showcases charming period architecture throughout, with original features and elegant proportions that reflect its distinguished heritage. The grand entry hallway welcomes you with an impressive original porch entrance with feature staircase, setting the tone for the generous accommodation arranged over four floors, including a versatile basement or cellar level that provides ample storage or potential for further development. The ground floor boasts two inviting reception rooms, comprising a spacious drawing room and a formal dining room, each enjoying direct access to the gardens and featuring log burning stoves for a warm and welcoming atmosphere. The modern fitted kitchen is complemented by a separate pantry, offering both style and practicality with outside access to the cottage garden. Upstairs, five well-proportioned bedrooms provide flexible accommodation for a growing family or visiting guests, while a large family bathroom suite and a smaller W.C suite, ideally situated to the first floor provide convenience to the upper floors. The property’s substantial plot includes established woodland areas, mature planting, and a charming walled garden, as well as a double garage and a kitchen garden for those with a passion for gardening or outdoor pursuits. Additionally you will find two separate driveways with ample parking. This characterful residence combines the best of country living with convenient access to local amenities, fine dining, horse racing and scenic countryside walks.
