There is something quite magical about stepping outside the gates onto Crane Street's cobbles and feeling a tangible sense of history all around you - from The Trafalgar Tavern on the corner, built in 1837 and resplendent with its brightly-coloured bunting that crosses the street, to the Old Royal Naval College, Henry VIII's birthplace, whose UNESCO-protected buildings host a year-round programme of concerts, plays and other events.

Within a five-minute walk is The Cutty Sark, the world-famous tea clipper and on the riverfront to the east, the historic pub that shares its name. Royal Greenwich Park is similarly close, with its green expanses peppered by such prolific buildings.
