A village rooted in aviation history, White Waltham surrounds De Havilland Place with character, community and enduring beauty.

The village of White Waltham has flourished from a medieval farming hamlet into one of Berkshire's most cherished villages. Its Norman-arched church, cricket green and thatched cottages paint an idyllic backdrop for a long history of innovation.

Most notable was the role the village played in the Second World War. It all began in the 1930s when Fairey Aviation chose grassland on the outskirts of the village for test flights. Establishing the airfield paved the way for the site to be chosen as the Air Transport Auxiliary Headquarters when the war began. This essential team co-ordinated men and women from around the world as they ferried thousands of aircraft between factories and front-line squadrons, playing an invaluable role in the war effort. Today the West London Aero Club rules the skies, offering leisure flights above the Thames Valley, but the important heritage of the site continues to be remembered.

While life in White Waltham has changed in many ways over time, village community remains as strong as ever, with The Beehive local pub and the annual village fete drawing residents warmly together, just as they have done for generations.
