History of Claremont House

Built circa 1740 for Admiral Ratsey, it has many distinguishing features from the impressions left by the original stonemasons and sailors who built the property. With the property being built in a seafaring area, the house was a focal point for many naval gatherings.

One of the first properties to be insured for fire, the sun emblem showing the Sun Fire Office insurance 'fire mark', is still visible outside the house. Local lore says, due to its location not far from the harbour, there were several tunnels (now impassable) built between the house and the waterline which would be a sure sign of smuggling in days gone by. Historically served by three wells, there was also an ice room and large coal cellar.

The house was built adjacent to Claremont Cottage, itself built around 1680, and there were three interconnecting doors between the two properties which gave the Admiral the luxury of housing two separate households but allowing direct access to both! The Ratsey family continued its ownership for many years and, prior to World War 1, the house accommodated Cowes library. During the inter-war years the house changed ownership several times and, as with many outside spaces, the grounds became a market garden during the Second World War. A recorded event was when a bomb hit the granite war memorial cross at the bottom in nearby Market Hill, falling through the conservatory roof of Claremont House. The cross itself is now in Northwood House gardens as a permanent display.

Originally there were stables within the grounds, accessed from Sun Hill, and these were initially converted to a single dwelling for the butler. As his family grew so did the conversion and, after a brief period of it being a dairy, the final outcome became Mulberry Cottage.

Interior

From the moment you step inside, the house exudes period splendor, with exquisite original details including mahogany bannisters, ornate staircase paneling and beautifully preserved old ship timbers that adorn the ceiling beams on the lower floors. Thoughtfully restored, yet sensitively updated, the property blends the old with the new, creating an elegant atmosphere. Notable improvements include the coal hole transformed into a wine cellar—a perfect nod to the property's storied past. The impressive high ceilings provide a sense of airy grandeur, with every corner echoing the history of the house. The sea-facing rooms become even more impressive as you ascend the building, set over five-storeys, with each floor presenting increasingly magnificent views of the Solent.

Ground Floor:

The imposing entrance door, with its magnificent door lock, opens to an impressive staircase with a beautifully carved mahogany banister and panelled walls. This curves up towards the upper floors and has storage cupboards beneath and within this entrance hallway is the original butler's bell. From here, to your right, is the dual aspect cosy drawing room with a fireplace that has exposed brickwork within.

The kitchen is half panelled, and around the large beautiful red Aga is exposed brickwork which is a real focal point in this well-appointed room. In a central position is a thick wood topped island that doubles as a breakfast bar. Cream wall and base units flow around the room with space for an American style fridge/freezer. From here you reach the dining room with its double patio doors so you can enjoy the views and have direct access to the gardens.

A rear utility room has an expanse of fitted cupboards as well as space and plumbing for a washing machine and tumble dryer, an additional sink and space for a further fridge. Off this practical area is a convenient wc and basin as well as having access to the conservatory where the boiler is housed. The courtyard beyond here has an outside tap, log store and hidden below, one of the original wells serving the property.

Basement:

Two reception rooms which are currently a library and TV/playroom and the wine cellar, previously used to store coal, with a wrought iron gate.

As you descend the stairs with its original flagstones that continue across this level, there are old ship's timbers within the ceilings adding further character. Both the library and playroom have been sympathetically and beautifully renovated to a high standard, keeping its charm whilst providing very useable contemporary spaces.

The wine cellar is reached through a bespoke iron gate and the original access hole to deposit coal, has now been cleverly given a glass covering which can be lit up and seen from the above level.

First Floor:

On this level is a substantial bedroom with an equally impressive ensuite bathroom and access to the decked balcony along with a sitting room. A fully panelled sitting room has a log burner within the chimney breast and is a further space to relax and enjoy the views.

The generously sized principal bedroom leads out through double patio doors to a decked terrace which has a wrought iron staircase winding down to the gardens below. The ensuite bathroom is a triumph of design with pale blue wooden doors on a multitude of storage cupboards with white marble surfaces around the large walk-in shower, wc and double vanity basin. On the ceiling are limed ships' timbers and a high level port hole window allowing this airy room to be filled with light. All the bathroom enhancements and improvements have been completed in 2025.

Second Floor:

Two generously sized bedrooms, with a family bathroom that leads off to an office/hobby room which is lit by a port hole window.

The two bedrooms have built in wardrobes and both benefit from the extensive sea views at this level in the house. The family bathroom, with its bath and separate shower cubicle and double basins, has an office/hobby room leading off at the rear.

Third Floor:

A double bedroom with a further family bathroom.

Accessed by a separate staircase you reach a good-sized double bedroom and across the hallway is a useful bathroom complete with bath, wc, vanity unit and basin.

Exterior

A distinctive wooden gate opens into the gardens, approached via a short flight of steps and framed by attractive curved red brick walls, with a lantern above, believed to have originally been gas lit. Beyond lies a wide paved terrace extending across the full width of the house, leading to Mulberry Cottage and abutting the expansive lawn and gardens, from where there are truly wonderful views across the Solent.

The beautifully maintained grounds are laid predominantly to lawn and interspersed with a wide variety of mature plants and trees including a delightful Mulberry tree. A 'stepping stone' pathway leads past the summerhouse and two garden/boat stores and continues around to the rear gate, providing access to off-road parking and the double garage.

Set within this peaceful garden the charming summerhouse has a wooden-panelled interior. With power and lighting already in place, it offers an ideal space for quiet relaxation or, alternatively, could serve as an excellent garden office.
