Summary

Rock House is an impressive Grade II listed Georgian home, understood to be the former residence of William Barron, landscape gardener at Elvaston Castle.

With a wealth of original features including original sash windows, gas lamps (decommissioned), traditional fireplaces and a span of intricate ornamental features, Rock House is the ideal family home for those with a love of character property.

Downstairs offers an impressive four reception areas including sitting room / guest bedroom, living room, breakfast room and dining room (currently used as a gym), as well as a newly fitted kitchen featuring travertine flooring, bespoke built kitchen with oak topped island unit. Further downstairs includes a well proportioned WC, and door to the substantial cellar with lighting.

To the upstairs, the property offers three impressive bedrooms, some with ceiling height of over 4m.

The master suite is accessed via a bright and sizeable dressing room.

Bedroom two comprises of impressive floor-to-ceiling bespoke wardrobes and library including a fairytale rolling ladder. Bedroom three offers an impressive traditional Georgian fireplace, alongside fitted wardrobes. The family bathroom comprises a substantial sized walk in shower, and bathroom furniture from the exclusive Harvey George range.

To the outside, Rock House offers a significant amount of parking for up to four vehicles, and a well landscaped garden complete with pear, apple, plum, damson and peach trees. A garage building completes the outside with light and electricity.
