Rother Cottage, an extended 19th Century house, stands in 2.927 acres with a fenced paddock, garden and a range of domestic outbuildings and stables. The property stands on the outskirts of Brant Broughton, a beautiful village and conservation area. The location, centrally situated between Newark, Lincoln, Grantham and Sleaford, is just inside the Lincolnshire border, an important catchment area for primary and secondary schooling. Rother Cottage is presented in a beautiful state of decoration, ready to move into and ideal for family occupation.

The property provides practical and well planned accommodation suitable for a modern lifestyle. The ground floor accommodation provides a spacious kitchen, utility room, WC, snug, front hall, sitting room and a spacious king size ground floor bedroom, en-suite and dressing room, useful for visitors or a guest room. There is a super-king size master bedroom with en-suite, three further king size bedrooms with bedroom four having an en-suite facility and family bathroom.. Externally there is a good range of traditionally built outbuildings, ample parking and turning space. The paddock is an ideal facility for a family with children's ponies or, indeed, simply for nature and conservation.

Rother Cottage lies within the Brant Broughton Conservation Area, opposite to the beautiful grounds of the Manor House and adjacent to the sports ground with pavilion.

The village of Brant Broughton is situated 8 miles east of Newark close to the Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire border. This pretty and genuinely unspoilt village has a variety of brick and stone built properties. The spire of the Parish Church, St Helen's, noted by Nikolaus Pevsner in his book Buildings of England, is one of the most elegant in Lincolnshire. The village has a primary school and a public house. Communications in the area are excellent with the A1 and A46 trunk roads crossing at Newark. Newark and Grantham are on the main East Coast railway line with rail services to London King's Cross and journey times of just over 65 minutes from Grantham station.

The property is traditionally built with brick elevations under a pantiled roof. There are original late 19th Century characteristics and the property was extended some years ago. Planning permission has been granted and Building Regulation Approval obtained for a kitchen extension and glass fronted atrium. The property provides the following accommodation:
