SITUATION

Set in the heart of Tregony, the gateway to the Roseland Peninsula, this beautifully presented period home has been meticulously renovated, extended, and modernised while preserving its charming original features. The result is a surprisingly spacious family residence where contemporary open-plan living harmonises effortlessly with traditional character.

Tregony strikes a lovely balance between historic character and everyday practicality. Its storied past once a port, a market town, and political borough blends seamlessly with a warm, rural present. For residents (or potential buyers), it offers the tranquillity of village life without sacrificing connection to the wider Roseland area. It's equally appealing as an ideal base for exploring Cornwall's quieter corners.

DESCRIPTION

This beautifully renovated and extended early 1800s period home has been thoughtfully updated to combine historic character with modern comfort. Remodelled and extended in 2018, and rewired, insulated, and fitted with replacement windows the property presents a wonderfully refined and sympathetic refurbishment.

Porcelain tiles seamlessly run throughout the kitchen/ dining area continuing to the outside patio spaces communicating effortlessly the inside and out.

A rear hall with a slate floor provides understairs storage and access to the garden. The snug/ office, complete with a herringbone engineered oak floor, offers an inviting secondary living space, complemented by a separate utility/ laundry room.
