00 PROJECTS CASE STUDY

The bathroom in Russell Purnell's new bedroom has undergone a complete redesign to make better use of the shared layout and bring character to the windowless space. Russell, who is an estate agent, hired Louise Atkinson, head of design and showroom manager at West One Bathrooms (westonebathrooms.com), to devise the new scheme.

Louise's plan was to keep the basin in the same position, but replace it with a contemporary design. The area around it would be warmed by underfloor heating. She also suggested taking out the bath and moving the box to make space for a generous walk-in shower at the rear end of the room.

As the bathroom floor is concrete, a slightly raised floor was built in the shower to make room for the drainage to fit beneath it, she explains. A new stud wall with recessed shelf conceals the pipework for the fittings and the entire area was waterproofed. A long linear drain at the back of space prevents water flowing into the rest of the room, Louise says. A second stud wall conceals the wall-hung basin cabinet and facilities built-in storage niches.

Russell, who is in his late thirties, asked Louise to create a glamorous scheme, so she picked out a dramatic, water-proof floral wallpaper. It's teamed with pointed wall paneling and marble-effect tiles. "I chose a design with gold veining to tone with Russell's choice of brushed brass fittings," she says.

The bold look and clever layout have successfully compensated for the room's lack of natural light and tricky shape. "It's a thoroughly persuadable and lovely space to start and end the day in," says Russell. 00
