Property Introduction

This sizeable Grade II listed end of terrace house dates back to around 1740 and used to serve as a Counting House for the nearby Perran Iron Foundry. There are many remaining period features, such as stained glass half glazed door and vault door, feature fireplaces and high ceilings.

The property consists of four bedrooms (two en-suite), a generous sized lounge, dining room, office space, ground floor bathroom, a modern updated kitchen and a lovely garden to enjoy which is divided into three areas at the rear of the property.

There is also parking space to the front.

All located within easy access to Falmouth, Truro and Penryn and a Public House.

Anyone seeking a character house should read on.....

Location

Positioned conveniently for both Truro and Falmouth and situated just yards away from the popular public house The Norway Inn. There is a regular bus service along the A39 and a train station a few minutes drive away at Perranwell Station, both of which provide travel to the city of Truro and beyond and in the other direction to the harbour town of Falmouth. In addition, there is a school bus service from the main road and from the nearby villages of Mylor Bridge and Perranwell Station to Penryn College Secondary School. Perranwell Station boasts a well renowned Public House serving quality meals, a village community store, pre-school and junior school and the nearby village of Mylor Bridge offers similar facilities and also a dentist and doctors surgery. Mylor Harbour offers an abundance of water sports and is where triple Olympic gold medallist, Ben Ainslie first learnt to sail! Excellent dining can be enjoyed here at the harbour at Castaways, Café Mylor or indeed at the famous creekside Pandora Inn. The City of Truro has a good range of main and individual shops, banks and restaurants and a mainline railway that connects further down through Cornwall and up to London Paddington and Newquay Airport is twenty five miles distant providing regular easy access to London. The beautiful coastline town of Falmouth is just over five miles away.
