Location

Badby is a rural village and civil parish two miles south of Daventry, set among woodlands and countryside with the River Nene running through it. It marks the western trailhead of both the Knightley Way and the 110-mile Nene Way walking routes.

To the north lies Badby Wood, part of the Fawsley Estate and a designated SSSI, famed for its spring bluebells and public access. The village has a primary school and the Grade II* listed St Mary the Virgin Church, dating to the 14th century.

Transport links are good, with nearby rail stations at Long Buckby, Rugby, and Banbury offering connections to London, Birmingham, and beyond.

Community life is active, centred around the village pub and groups for film, music, art, fitness, theatre, history, and more.
