— THE POSITION

440 FEET ABOVE LONDON

Few London houses can claim both altitude and antiquity. The Old Court House manages both. Standing at approximately 440 feet above sea level at the summit of Hampstead — one of the highest points in north London — it looks out across the Heath from a position no later development can replicate.

Behind a walled and gated driveway with secure parking for two cars sits a Grade II listed, double-fronted residence of 3,923 sq ft over four floors, its multi-coloured stock brick façade, gauged-brick sash windows and finely detailed doorway all protected under its listing.

THE HOUSE

A GRADE II LISTED RESIDENCE

The entrance makes its case immediately. The reception hall rises through a double volume around a period fireplace, with a galleried walkway crossing above at first-floor level — interior architecture that cannot be retro-fitted.

From it opens a principal reception room of close to twenty-six feet, lit by three floor-to-ceiling windows, alongside a second reception room of over eighteen feet and a study of almost fifteen feet that works as a genuine home office.

WHERE THE HOUSE IS LIVED IN

A kitchen and dining room of just over twenty-five feet runs across the rear around a central island, opening directly onto the terrace, with a family room of a full twenty-two feet beside it.

A walk-in pantry, utility room, store and two guest cloakrooms keep the practical business of a house this size out of sight.

Air conditioning runs throughout, and the paved terrace steps down to a private lawned garden of close to ninety-seven feet.

— THE SETTING

AT THE CROWN OF THE HILL

Formerly Heath View and Earlsmead, the house forms part of a historic cluster at the crown of the hill, moments from Jack Straw's Castle and the Heath's 800 acres of woodland, meadow and swimming ponds.

Hampstead Village is a short walk, with Hampstead Underground (Northern Line) running directly into the West End and City.
