The Old Rectory is a handsome and substantial Grade II Listed village house occupying an exceptional position in the heart of Sledmere, one of the Yorkshire Wolds' most distinctive estate villages.

Set on approximately 0.57 acres of established, predominantly walled gardens, the property offers unusually generous family accommodation with six bedrooms and three reception rooms, plus garaging, outbuildings, and ample private parking.

The house displays attractive Georgian influence with later Victorian additions and retains considerable character, including tall sash windows, high ceilings, fireplaces, internal shutters, cornicing and a vaulted cellar. These traditional features are combined with the space and practicality required for modern family living.

The current owners have occupied The Old Rectory for some 28 years and have undertaken significant maintenance and improvement during their ownership. Recent works include repointing all four elevations and the roadside wall in lime mortar, renovation of the guttering and replacement of all but one window with bespoke hardwood sash windows.

One of the property's more unusual distinctions is its setting within a landscape closely associated with David Hockney. Sledmere features in his Yorkshire work 'The Road to York Through Sledmere' (1997), in which The Old Rectory itself is depicted.

Privately owned houses of this scale within Sledmere rarely become available, making The Old Rectory an unusual opportunity to acquire a substantial family home in one of the Yorkshire Wolds' best-known villages.

LOCATION

Set within a landscape that has inspired David Hockney during his celebrated return to Yorkshire. The village features in his work titled 'The Road to York Through Sledmere (1997)', which reflects the distinctive character of the village and its setting within the wider landscape. The Old Rectory itself is depicted within this piece (top left).

Sledmere lies within the rolling landscape of the Yorkshire Wolds, an area known for its open countryside, quiet lanes, and attractive villages. The nearby market towns of Driffeld and Malton provide everyday amenities, including shops, schools, and rail connections. The historic city of York is within comfortable reach, and the East coast is also close by, with Bridlington offering sandy beaches, a harbour, and coastal walks. The wider region supports a range of outdoor pursuits including walking, cycling, golf and riding.

Transport links connect the area to Hull, Leeds, York and beyond, making the location suitable for both permanent residence and a country retreat.
