The Home -

Set within Northhill House, a contemporary brick building close to the open green space of Hackney Downs, this beautifully considered three-bedroom apartment combines clean modern architecture with warm, relaxed interiors.

Extending to approximately 973 sq ft, the apartment is arranged across a single level and has an unusually spacious footprint, centred around an impressive open-plan living space measuring almost 23 ft across. Floor-to-ceiling glazing draws daylight deep into the plan, while oak flooring, timber detailing and a restrained palette soften the building's more architectural lines.

Three double bedrooms, two bathrooms, a separate utility room and two private outdoor spaces make this a particularly practical home, while its own entrance adds a welcome sense of independence.

Offers in excess of £700,000

The Indoors

The main living space is the natural centre of the apartment, bringing the kitchen, dining and sitting areas together in one large, sociable room. A run of tall glazing creates a strong connection with the outside and brings particularly good natural light into the room.

The kitchen has been finished in a simple contemporary palette, with dark cabinetry set against white tiled splashbacks and pale worktops. A peninsula forms an informal breakfast bar, its slatted timber frontage introducing warmth and texture alongside the oak flooring. Open timber shelving, black fittings and integrated appliances complete a scheme that feels smart without becoming overly formal.

There is ample room beyond for a substantial dining table and a comfortable sitting area, creating clearly defined places to cook, eat and unwind while retaining the openness of the overall space. The current interiors layer deep green upholstery, artwork, plants and mid-century-inspired furniture against the quieter architectural backdrop.

The main bedroom is particularly impressive at over 18 ft in length. Bespoke full-height cabinetry provides extensive storage, while tall glazing brings in plenty of light and opens directly onto the private outside space. An en-suite shower room is tucked neatly beyond.

Two further double bedrooms sit elsewhere within the plan, one currently arranged as a nursery and the other as a home office/guest room. Both have excellent built-in storage, making the apartment particularly well suited to family life or those needing a permanent place to work from home.

A second bathroom is finished in large-format neutral tiling with a bath and overhead shower, while the separate utility room keeps laundry and everyday practicalities away from the main living areas.

The Outdoors

One of the apartment's more unusual qualities is its relationship with the outside.

The secluded patio garden creates private outdoor space and is reached directly from the living room. It has room for planting, seating and a barbecue, with the tall windows allowing the greenery to become part of the interior.

The bedrooms also connect particularly well with the outside, reinforcing the sense that this is closer in character to a small contemporary house than a conventional apartment.

Northhill House itself is a distinctive piece of modern infill architecture, its pale brick façade punctuated by large black-framed windows and projecting metal balconies.
