The History

The Greaves forms part of a distinctive Grade II listed development believed to originate from former agricultural buildings associated with the surrounding farmland, sympathetically converted to residential use in the late 20th century. Retaining much of their original character, the buildings showcase traditional timber framing and barn-style architecture, reflecting the area's rural heritage. Minworth itself has historic roots as a small Warwickshire village, historically linked to farming and later light industry, evolving over time into a well-connected semi-rural location. Today, it offers an appealing balance of countryside surroundings and modern convenience, with the nearby Sutton Coldfield providing a broader range of amenities while the immediate area still retains a sense of its historic, pastoral origins.
