The Property

Originally built in the 1950s, the property has been thoughtfully extended over the years while retaining many of the features that give it its character. These include a feature log burner set within a brick chimney surround, together with wooden flooring extending throughout much of the ground floor.

The property has been extended to the side over two storeys, providing additional accommodation across both floors, while a further extension to the rear has created a bright and useful conservatory.

The ground floor is arranged around a spacious entrance hall, with access to the main reception room, which features an open fireplace and wooden flooring. The kitchen is positioned alongside a separate dining room and has a utility area located just off it.

To the rear, the conservatory extends the living accommodation and overlooks the garden, creating a further room that can be used throughout the year. A second reception room is also located on the ground floor and can be used as a double bedroom if required. A bathroom completes the ground floor accommodation.

The first floor comprises three double bedrooms, a fourth single bedroom and a family bathroom. The three double bedrooms provide generous bedroom accommodation, with the additional single bedroom suitable as a bedroom or study.
