LOCATION

Trethurgy is a small, peaceful village in Cornwall, England, situated within the parish of Treverbyn and just a couple of miles from the larger town of St Austell. Surrounded by rolling countryside, traditional Cornish cottages, and historic landmarks such as prehistoric earthworks and ancient crosses, the village has a distinctly rural and historic character. While Trethurgy itself is quiet with limited on-site amenities, residents and visitors benefit from nearby facilities in St Austell, including supermarkets, schools, healthcare services, a mainline railway station, and a variety of shops and eateries. The area is particularly well known for its proximity to major attractions like the Eden Project, a world-famous botanical garden, as well as beautiful coastal spots such as Pentewan Sands beach. Outdoor amenities are a key feature of the location, with easy access to countryside walks, country parks, and scenic hiking areas, making Trethurgy an appealing place for those seeking a tranquil lifestyle with convenient access to wider services and leisure opportunities.
