About The Property

Looking for a character stone fisherman's cottage in the very heart of New Quay, directly opposite Dolau beach with sea views, original features and a private enclosed patio garden to the rear? This immaculately presented maisonette offers stylish furnished accommodation over three floors, including two bedrooms, two bath/shower rooms and a versatile loft room (accessed via a loft ladder), all in one of the most sought-after spots on the Cardigan Bay coast.

Set right in the heart of New Quay, opposite Dolau beach and with the shops, cafés, harbour and everyday amenities close at hand, this traditional stone built fisherman's cottage is in a superb position for anyone wanting to be fully connected to the coast and village life. It is one of those properties where the setting does a great deal of the work, but the cottage itself more than holds its own, with plenty of charm, a very good standard of presentation and the sort of character that suits its seaside location perfectly.

From the front, it appears hidden, only giving a sense of the cottage's history and character, but inside that continues with exposed stone walls, timber beams, deep window reveals and a layout that feels both practical and full of personality. The main living accommodation is arranged over two floors, giving a good degree of flexibility while making the most of the building's shape and features.

The first floor is home to the main day-to-day living space, where the living room and dining room connect well and create a sociable central area for the house. This room has a really attractive feel, helped by the exposed stonework, timber detailing and the wood-burning stove set within the impressive fireplace. It is a room with proper character.

Continued:

The dining area sits naturally between the living room and kitchen, and French doors open straight out to the rear patio garden. That connection to the outside works particularly well here, bringing in good natural light and making the space feel easy to use for everyday living, meals with family and friends, or simple indoor-outdoor use in warmer weather.

The kitchen sits just off the dining area and is fitted with a good range of units and work surfaces, with a style that suits the cottage well. It feels smart and functional rather than overdone, and the colour contrast between the cabinetry and walls gives it a slightly more contemporary edge while still sitting comfortably within the older building.

Up on the second floor are the two main bedrooms and the bath/shower room accommodation. One bedroom enjoys a lovely outlook towards the beach and New Quay head, which is a real selling point here. Being able to see the water and coastline from inside the cottage gives this room something extra and ties the property closely to its setting. The second bedroom is a useful twin room, ideal for guests, children or holiday use.

The bathrooms have been finished in keeping with the overall standard of the property. The en-suite has a more traditional feel, with a freestanding bath and exposed stone walling giving it plenty of character, while the shower room has a more modern style with good quality fittings. Together, they give the house a level of practicality that is often missing in older cottages.

On the top floor, the loft room adds another layer of flexibility. This is a very useful space that could suit a range of purposes, whether as an occasional extra bedroom, home office, hobbies room or simple overflow sleeping space. It also adds to the overall sense that the property offers more than first expected from the front. This can only be accessed via a loft ladder, and should only be used as an attic space unless the necessary permissions and regulations have been given, there is restricted headspace in the attic.

Outside, the enclosed walled patio garden to the rear is a particularly appealing part of the house. It is private, easy to maintain and well suited to outside dining or just sitting out after a day on the beach. In a central coastal position such as this, having an enclosed outside space is a real advantage. It feels sheltered and practical, and complements the cottage well.

The property is offered furnished, with good quality fixtures and fittings, which adds further appeal for anyone looking for a straightforward move, a second home, or a holiday let style purchase in a strong coastal location. The overall presentation is very good, and the balance between original character and modern comfort has been handled well. In my view, that is what makes this cottage stand out most. It feels authentic without feeling hard work, and that is not always easy to find in period coastal homes.

New Quay remains one of the best-known coastal spots in West Wales, with its harbour, beaches, boat trips, places to eat and strong year-round appeal all helping to keep demand steady. For anyone specifically looking along the Cardigan Bay coastline, this position is hard to overlook. Being right opposite Dolau beach and within such easy reach of everything the village has to offer gives this cottage a real edge, whether the search is for a main home, a coastal base or an investment with lifestyle appeal as well as practicality.

This is a very attractive cottage in a prime New Quay position, combining sea views, character features, flexible accommodation and a private rear patio garden in one of the most appealing parts of Cardigan Bay. Early viewing would be a very sensible move.
