Location

Redruth is known for its mining heritage, the remnants of which remains today with many old engine houses and features around the town and local villages. The name of the town allegedly comes from the colour of the local stream which was discoloured with iron oxide.

The town has within its centre a bronze 6'7 miner to pay homage to its history and as a result of all the mining the town grew and grew and now has a very varied and interested history. Some of the homes of the mine owners and senior staff are located around the town, some of the grandest and most splendid homes anywhere in the county.

Teg Lowarth continues the Cornish theme, translated from the Cornish to mean 'pretty garden' the eight houses that make up the cul-de-sac replaced a very old cottage which had a very large garden. Located just on the outskirts of the town there is public transport in close proximity, a bus stop a few hundred yards away and the mainline railways station in the middle of the town. There is also excellent access to schools, there is a playing field at Clijah Croft opposite which is home to Redruth United football club (which has children's, woman's and men's teams) and schooling is also in striking distance.

Kresen Kernow (or Cornwall Centre) is also within the town and has 14 miles of shelving with over 1.5 million of Cornwall treasured archives.
