The Property

Tucked away at the end of a quiet lane shared with just one neighbouring converted barn, Brithdir Cottage sits in a wonderfully secluded position on the mountainside, surrounded by open countryside and far-reaching views across mid-Wales. Believed to date from at least the early nineteenth century, it is a property that will appeal to those seeking genuine peace, privacy, and a strong connection to the landscape.

The boot room provides a practical and welcoming entrance. Originally a prefabricated addition, it has been thoughtfully rebuilt by the current owners as a permanent structure, an early indication of the care and investment seen throughout the property. This leads into the kitchen, a generous and well-proportioned space fitted with a range cooker and ample room for both cooking and gathering.

Beyond, the sitting room forms the heart of the cottage, with exposed stone walls, original beams and a wood-burning stove set within a substantial inglenook fireplace. A traditional tiled floor further enhances the sense of age and character. The adjoining dining room, with its flagstone flooring and beam ceiling, continues this theme, and there is a consistent sense throughout the ground floor of a house that has evolved naturally over time.

At the front of the cottage, the conservatory offers a bright additional living space, with uninterrupted views across the surrounding countryside. It is a room that naturally draws you in throughout the day. The ground floor is completed by a newly fitted bathroom, where a freestanding roll-top bath introduces a subtle note of refinement.

Upstairs are two double bedrooms, each with the characteristic sloping ceilings and exposed beams typical of a cottage of this age. Both enjoy open views across the hills and valleys of mid-Wales, making the setting a constant presence.

The current owners have invested significantly during their ownership. A full new heating system has been installed, the chimney repointed and lined, and the bathroom replaced. Solar panels have been added to help offset running costs, and a substantial retaining wall has been constructed along the rear bank, bringing structure to the sloping ground.

To the side of the cottage, a large paved patio creates a private and sheltered outdoor space, ideally positioned to take advantage of the views across the valley. It is a well-considered extension of the living space rather than an afterthought.

The land extends to approximately one acre and is divided into five paddocks, offering flexibility for livestock or equestrian use. For riders in particular, the location is exceptional: Glyndwr's Way passes directly along the top of the property, providing immediate access to miles of riding without the need to use a road.

The equestrian facilities are well executed. A substantial outbuilding provides a workshop and storage, with two adjoining stables and a tack room, all set on a concrete base with power and water connected. A sand round pen has also been installed for schooling, positioned to make the most of the available space.

A static caravan within the grounds offers additional accommodation or storage, while a separate woodshed and workshop complete what is a highly functional and well-planned smallholding.

Properties offering this level of seclusion, just two homes at the end of a quiet lane, combined with established equestrian facilities, direct bridleway access and views of this quality are rare in mid-Wales. Brithdir Cottage presents a compelling and well-balanced opportunity.

The Location

Brithdir Cottage is situated in the hamlet of Old Hall, a scattered rural community nestled into the hillside in the heart of mid-Wales, just a short drive from the market town of Llanidloes. It is the kind of place where the lanes are quiet, the neighbours are few and the landscape does the talking, with open hill, forestry and farmland stretching out in every direction.

The nearby town of Llanidloes, approximately three miles away, provides everything needed for day-to-day life and a great deal more besides. Rich in history, it is home to the iconic Market Hall, the oldest timber-framed market hall still in situ in Wales, and retains the kind of independent, community-spirited character that is increasingly rare in small Welsh market towns. Residents will find a dentist, medical centre, cottage hospital, primary school and secondary school with both Welsh and English language streams, alongside a butcher, fishmonger, bakery, greengrocer, independent bookshop, artisanal boutiques, pubs, cafes and takeaways.

The town has a lively social calendar, with the annual Llanidloes Carnival each July a particular highlight. For those drawn to the outdoors, the surrounding area is exceptional. Llyn Clywedog, a 615-acre reservoir built on the headwaters of the River Severn, lies around four miles away, offering scenic walking and cycling routes as well as trout fishing through the local angling club. The Hafren Forest is around six miles distant, with waymarked trails leading to waterfalls and the source of the River Severn itself. Llanidloes also supports well-established cricket, football and rugby clubs, the latter playing host to the Heart of 7s, Wales' largest sports and music festival.
