An end-of-terrace thatched cottage set in the village of Stockleigh Pomeroy, combining period detail with a layout that works well for day-to-day living.

Inside, the house retains much of its original character, with exposed beams, good ceiling height for a cottage of this age, and a central living space built around an inglenook fireplace with a wood-burning stove and original bread oven door. The entrance hall is notably spacious and finished with parquet flooring, setting the tone as you move through the property.

The kitchen is fitted with bespoke solid wood units, complemented by a mix of wood and granite worktops, along with a ceramic sink, Neff oven and four-ring hob. A separate large utility room includes a Belfast sink along with a WC and shower, adding practical flexibility.

The second reception room, currently used as an additional bedroom, could alternatively serve as an office or study.

Upstairs, the accommodation includes a single bedroom, a double bedroom to the front, and a larger principal bedroom with dual-aspect windows and built-in wardrobes. The bathroom is fitted with a vanity sink and arranged to serve all rooms on this floor.

Outside, the property offers a range of features not always found with cottages of this type. There is parking for two to three vehicles, along with a garage, summer house, two sheds and a wood store. Gardens extend to both the front and rear, both are well tended with flower and shrub borders with the rear garden enjoying open views across the surrounding countryside.

Overall, this is a well-balanced cottage that retains its historic character while providing the space, storage and practicality needed for modern living, all set within a beautiful rural Mid Devon village.
