Perched proudly at the top (read: no upstairs neighbours doing midnight aerobics), this immaculate two-bedroom flat is serving style, comfort, and just the right amount of smugness. Whether you're a first-time buyer, savvy investor, or simply someone who appreciates a good balcony moment—this one ticks boxes you didn't even know you had.

Step inside and you'll find a spacious lounge/kitchen/diner that's basically the social butterfly of the home—perfect for hosting, relaxing, or pretending you're on a cooking show while making beans on toast. Throw open the doors to your private balcony and voilà—instant “I've got my life together” energy.

Location? Oh, it's a bit of a show-off. You're just moments from Stanford-le-Hope train station, whisking you directly into London Fenchurch Street—ideal for commuters or spontaneous city adventures. The town centre is also within easy reach, so your coffee, groceries, and takeaway cravings are all sorted.

Add in allocated parking (no passive-aggressive neighbour notes required) and a long lease of approximately 145 years (future you says thanks), and you've got yourself a property that's as practical as it is charming.
